Are you a Mensan who struggled with depression as a child?

Did how well the environment fit you as child impact the development of your depression?

Qualitative Study examining the childhood experiences of gifted and depressed adults

My name is Tricia Fox and I am currently pursuing my doctoral degree in clinical psychology at Adler University in Chicago. I believe that there is more to learn about our experiences of growing up gifted that may better inform resources and support for gifted children, and ultimately reduce any environmental impacts on mental health outcomes.

This research is my doctoral dissertation, a requirement to obtain my PsyD degree, as well as something I truly believe our community needs.

Participation Involves:

Being interviewed and reviewing your data to check for theme accuracy

You May Qualify If:

You are 18 years or older

You are a Mensa member

You have been diagnosed with depression
